Iconography for American Scenery

A language of universal symbols—iconography—dominated nineteenth-century American landscape painting. Please refer to this list as you walk through American Scenery to more fully appreciate the meanings and messages these works of art were originally meant to evoke.

Leisure and Work

- Bridges frequently appear on the canvases of landscape painters. Natural bridges and rustic wooden bridges are seen as delicate and temporary, in contrast to stone bridges, which are sturdy and permanent. A stone bridge also symbolizes human long-term involvement in nature.

- Fishing, in comparison to hunting, is seen as a relaxed and tranquil activity. Often, fishermen are as interested in the beauty of their surroundings as they are in the catch of the day.

- Haying signifies the harmonious balance between humans and nature.

- Hunting is equated with death and violence; when the delicate balance between humans and nature is disturbed, any suggestion of peace is destroyed.

- Machines usher in progress and often signify human activity, but they also bring people into contact with nature in negative ways. The owners and operators of trains, mills, and the like wrestle for control of nature and seek to transform it.

- Water that is calm often reflects serenity, while violent, tumultuous water represents the raw force of nature and serves as a warning of its wild, untamed capacity.

Animals and Vegetation

- Cows symbolize the presence of humans in the landscape. Because cows are domesticated, their presence suggests the existence of farmers, even when the humans do not appear on the canvas. Cows represent the steady, regular rhythm of farming life and the effort of man to work in harmony with nature.

- Deer can represent a range of different ideas and concepts, depending on how they are used within the artwork’s narrative. One example plays on the belief that deer are prudent animals whose keen hearing may alert them to nearby danger—usually humans.

- A dead deer symbolizes man’s disruption of the natural balance of the wilderness.

- A lone deer symbolizes the end of an era; a fragile yet majestic creature, he is witnessing the final days of an age untouched by humans.

- Mullein plants are native to both Europe and Asia and were brought to North America by immigrants. While they have often been thought to symbolize good luck and fortune, contemporary scholars believe they represent the presence of white Europeans and the mistreatment of the land that followed their arrival.

- Trees take on many meanings in American landscape painting. Vibrant, fully foliaged trees represent hope, youth, and novelty. A tree stump represents human contact with nature and serves as an omen of the destruction that can come if the delicate balance between nature and humans is disturbed.

- A tree stump represents human contact with nature and serves as an omen of the destruction that can come if the delicate balance between nature and humans is disturbed.

Times of Day

- Dawn symbolizes rebirth and renewal, a new day with fresh possibilities.

- Sunrise is full of expectation and a sense of promise of what the day might bring. Light symbolizes innocence and hope for the rest of the day.

- A sunset commonly represents endings; often a sunset is depicted to suggest the end of a life.

- Summer stands for the vigor of adulthood and the drama and excitement that comes with an active life.

- Autumn denotes contemplation as the end of the year draws near. While not as bleak as those of winter, autumn landscapes allude to the passing of the bright, vibrant foliage of summer and the coming dormancy of winter.

- Winter often symbolizes death; the palette and scenery applied to winter landscapes reflect a nature devoid of life, with everything motionless, still, and literally frozen.

---

1. William Mason Brown, The Bridge (detail), circa 1850–60, oil on canvas, Private Collection
2. Henry Boese, Autumn Landscape (detail), 1869, oil on canvas, Private Collection
3. James Fairman, Haying Scene (detail), n.d., oil on canvas, Private Collection
4. Max Eglau, (detail), n.d., oil on canvas, Private Collection
5. Herman Herzog, Mountain Falls (detail), n.d., oil on canvas, Private Collection
6. James McDougal Hart, Hunter in a Landscape (detail), 1870, oil on canvas, Private Collection
7. Gustave Haffen, Landscape with Deer (detail), 1854, oil on canvas, Private Collection
8. Arthur Fitzwilliam Tait, Deer in Snow (detail), 1869, oil on canvas, Private Collection
9. Sanford Robinson Gifford, A Lake Twilight (detail), 1841, oil on canvas, Private Collection
10. Charles M. Davis, Deer (detail), 1870, oil on canvas, Private Collection
11. William Mason Brown, Autumn Landscape (detail), 1857, oil on canvas, Private Collection
12. Joseph Antonio Hekking, Summer Landscape with Cows Watering (detail), n.d., oil on canvas, Private Collection
13. Homer Dodge Martin, Saranac Lake (Morning) (detail), 1870, oil on canvas, Private Collection
14. John Frederick Kensett, Mount Chocorua (detail), 1857, oil on canvas, Private Collection
15. Clinton Loveridge, Five Landscape Vignettes (detail), n.d., oil on canvas, Private Collection
16. Clinton Loveridge, Chocorua (detail), 1857, oil on canvas, Private Collection
17. Joseph Antonio Hekking, Summer Landscape and Cows Watering (detail), n.d., oil on canvas, Private Collection
18. William Mason Brown, (detail), 1854, oil on canvas, Private Collection
19. Thomas Birch, Five Landscape Vignettes (detail), n.d., oil on canvas, Private Collection
20. Thomas Birch, The Landscape (Vignette) (detail), n.d., oil on canvas, Private Collection
American Scenery: Different Views in Hudson River School Painting is organized and toured by the Westmoreland Museum of American Art, Greensburg, PA.

Support for the exhibition at The Blanton is provided by Mr. and Mrs. Jack S. Blanton, Sr., George and Nicole Jeffords, Dana and Gene Powell, Mary Ann and Larry Faulkner, Suzan and Julius Glickman, Ginni and Richard Mithoff, Kay M. Onstead, and the Taconic Charitable Foundation.